

A Friendly Hour

Weekly companionship & technology visits for your residents

A volunteer program offered by a local university student

Loneliness is one of the quiet challenges of later life. I would like to help — by spending one reliable hour a week with a resident at your residence: good conversation, a familiar face, and a little help with the technology that keeps people connected to their families.

What I offer

- Weekly one-to-one visits — the same hour, the same resident, every week. Consistency people can count on.
- Real conversation & company — listening, reminiscing, a genuine friendly presence.
- Technology made simple — video-calling family, looking at photos, email, and gentle, scam-aware help with phones and tablets.
- A note for your team — a short summary after each visit, so staff and families know how it went.

Who I am

I am an incoming university Nutrition student with a sincere interest in healthy, connected aging. I am dependable, patient, and happy to complete a Vulnerable Sector Check, health screening, and any orientation your residence requires. References available on request.

How it would work

- You match me with a resident who would enjoy the company.
- I visit at a set day and time each week, signing in through your front desk.
- I follow all of your residence's policies, privacy rules, and staff guidance.
- Either of us can adjust or pause the arrangement at any time.

Why a weekly visit matters

Regular social contact is linked to better mood, sharper memory, and even healthier appetite and eating in older adults. One steady, friendly hour each week is a small thing that can make a real difference to a resident's day — and to the families who can't always be there.

I'd love to be considered. Please get in touch:
